Background
 The throwing of the play-stick, commonly called the weeet weeet ('wit-wit') was a popular activity among Aboriginal people in some parts of Australia, and various contests were held.
 The weeet weeet was often referred to as the 'kangaroo rat', because when thrown correctly its flight resembled the leaping action of this small marsupial. A weeet weeet was like a giant tadpole. The tail was a flexible stick and in some types when it was thrown it was swung backward and forward and bent almost double.
 After being thrown onto (or through) a small mound or pile of bushes, a weeet weeet could:

- leap along in a succession of bounds
- travel along the ground
- spin in a 'bouncing' action as it turned end over end

• travel in a parabola and strike the ground before travelling further
 • be thrown to slide along the ground (such as along a sandy beach).

Language
 In the language recorded from some people in the western district of Victoria:
Malnangyer, wida umelit warreete, umuk perperdunk
Now let us see who throw out the farthest. Throw it out.

Short description
 This is a throwing competition for distance and accuracy, using a club or pin to represent a throwing stick or weeet weeet.

Leongatha From liang, meaning "teeth".
